Inside Inver Hills

“Know your direction. That way you’re counting on yourself and not on others.” Good advice from Pat Talbert, an adult student who went through an accelerated degree-completion program known as ASAP. A comprehensive planning course provides a foundation and roadmap for degree completion. Talbert went on to finish her bachelor’s degree at Metropolitan State.

Inside Inver Hills

When it comes to college opportunity, Inver Hills is ready when you are.

On the campuses of many four-year universities, virtually every new student is 18 years old and just out of high school. But at Inver Hills, about half the students are traditional college age (18-24) and half are considered nontraditional (25 and older).

Mike Thuente could be considered an in-between student-young enough to look and qualify as traditional, but mature enough to know what he wants and make the most of college. "I knew college would be in my future eventually, but after high school I wasn't really ready for college or interested in going to school." He says he knew that the navy would give him valuable life experience: "I just figured I would have more direction and dedication if I waited."

Discharged in July 2004 and married with a new baby, Thuente enrolled at Inver Hills. Away from formal math since high school, Thuente had to start with developmental classes but then proceeded through college algebra and into the calculus track.

Attending every term since and carrying a full load, Thuente is planning to transfer to the U of M and major in mechanical engineering. With a 3.97 GPA through two years, he credits his teachers for his success. "You can tell they enjoy their jobs. They come ready to teach, and they're so willing to assist. The help is there if you need it."
