Two degree tracks are offered, both leading to an Associate of Science in Emergency Medical Services; a third diploma option is offered for those who may already have a degree, or are seeking a career as a paramedic without completing additional liberal arts coursework.

The Emergency Medical Services program also offers emergency medical technician (EMT) training in basic emergency medical care.

Developmental math and developmental English courses may be required for admission to the program, but cannot be applied to graduation requirements. Students must achieve a grade of C or higher in all required EMS and Liberal Arts courses.
